THE THREE LEVELS OF LEARNERS IN A CLASSROOM

1. High-Functioning Learners:

- Quick grasp of concepts, strong critical thinking skills.
- Require enrichment and advanced challenges.
- Benefit from independent and complex tasks.

2. Average Learners:

- Learn at a moderate pace with consistent effort.
- Need clear instructions and structured tasks.
- Benefit from varied learning approaches and practice opportunities.

3. Low-Functioning Learners:

- Require significant support and adaptations.
- Learn at a slower pace and may struggle with basic skills.
- Need simplified instructions, personalized attention, and patience.

Understanding these levels helps educators tailor their teaching strategies to meet the diverse needs of all students, fostering an inclusive and supportive learning environment.

Group 1	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
	Encounter: The learner was in the room when it happened; they show no awareness or acknowledgement of the task going on. This could be for many reasons	Awareness: The learner is aware that there is something going on, depending on the level of the pupil, it could be a brief change in facial expression or a glance over while they are involved in their own activity	Attention: The learner is now listening or aware of what is going on and may want to react to events	Response: Depends on the level of the learner, there is some form of reaction. This could be a smile as something happens or a vocalization or even gestures	Engagement: The learner is now involved ready to join in, again depending on the level of the learner. Assistance is still needed – it could be using as full physical support, or it could be full verbal prompting, imitating etc.	Participation: There is not a large change from engagement, but it could be the learner being more cooperative, even leading the activity with slightly physical support. If using verbal prompting, the amount of prompting is reduced	Involvement: The learner is more involved, they may need no physical support perhaps a nudge or point to start them. With prompting, they again may only need a few words to help them achieve
