TEXT: A DIALOGUE

Narrator: The Tear Thief could tell that just one of these tears was worth a hundred cried over spilt milk or a thousand crocodile tears. She reached out her pale hand to pluck one from the girl's cheek. Just then the girl wiped her eyes with her sleeve and looked sadly into a puddle. The Tear Thief's mischievous face stared up at her.

The girl (squealing): Eeek!

Narrator: She turned round to look behind herself. There was nobody there.

The girl looked at the puddle again. Sure enough, there was the reflection of the Tear Thief in the water.

The girl (puzzled): Who are you?

The Tear Thief (calmly): I am the Tear Thief.

Narrator: The girl knelt down by the puddle and stared hard at the Tear Thief's reflection.

The girl: How old are you?

The Tear Thief (mysteriously): As old as joy and sorrow.

The girl: Where do you live?

The Tear Thief: In every place where children cry.

The girl (unbelieving): Were you going to steal my tears?

The Tear Thief: Yes. Your tears are the most precious of all. They are worth more than diamonds.
